

Insight on Estate Planning

June/July 2014

Adapting to the times

Estate planning focus shifts to income taxes

International estate planning 101

When is the optimal time to begin receiving Social Security?

Estate Planning Pitfall

You don't have a buy-sell agreement for your business

MCQUEEN & SIDDALL, LLP

Personal & Business Legacy Counselors

Florida Office

575 2nd Avenue South, Suite 205 • St. Petersburg, Florida 33701
T: 727.471.5868 F: 866.287.1442

Arizona Office

15849 North 71st Street, Suite 120 • Scottsdale, Arizona 85254
T: 480.999.0237 F: 866.287.1442

www.McQSidLaw.com

Adapting to the times

Estate planning focus shifts to income taxes

Until recently, estate planning strategies typically focused on minimizing federal gift and estate taxes, with less regard for income taxes. Today, however, the estate and income tax law landscape is far different. What does this mean for estate planning? For many people — particularly those who expect to have little or no estate tax liability — it means shifting their focus to strategies for reducing income taxes.

Changing estate tax law

For many years, the combination of relatively low estate tax exemption amounts and high marginal rates could easily devour more than half of an estate's value. Popular estate planning techniques often had income tax implications, but in general any income tax consequences were eclipsed by the estate tax savings.

Now that has changed. For one thing, since 2001, the federal exemption has grown from $675,000 to $5.34 million. And, unlike before 2013, the exemption isn't scheduled to drop in the future. In fact, it will continue to gradually increase via annual inflation adjustments. Estate tax rates have also decreased significantly, from 55% to 40%. And the 40% rate has no expiration date.

For many people, this new gift and estate tax law regime means federal gift and estate taxes are no longer an issue.

Income tax matters

At the same time that potential gift and estate tax liability has disappeared for many, individual income tax rates have increased. In 2001, the top federal income tax rate was 39.1%, substantially lower than the top federal estate tax rate of 55%. Now the top income tax rate has grown to nearly as high as the current top estate tax rate.

Taxpayers with taxable income of more than certain annually adjusted levels (for 2014, $406,750 for single filers, $432,200 for heads of households, $457,600 for joint filers and $228,800 for separate filers) are now subject to a 39.6% marginal rate.

Have your cake and eat it

Intentionally defective grantor trusts — also known as income defective trusts (IDTs) — have long been a popular tool for reducing estate taxes. These trusts ensure that assets are removed from your estate while the trust income remains taxable to you. If, however, your estate is well within the $5.34 million gift and estate tax exemption — so that you're more concerned with reducing income taxes — you might consider an estate defective trust (EDT).

An EDT is essentially the opposite of an IDT. It's designed so that the trust income is taxable to your beneficiaries while the assets remain in your taxable estate. From an income tax perspective, an EDT provides two significant benefits. First, you can use it to shift income to beneficiaries in lower tax brackets, reducing your family's overall tax burden. Second, it allows you to share some wealth with your beneficiaries now without losing the benefits of the stepped-up basis at death.

Capital gains rates also have increased. Currently, the top rate is 20% (up from 15%) — 23.8% for taxpayers subject to the Affordable Care Act’s 3.8% net investment income tax (NIIT). It applies to certain net investment income — including dividends, taxable interest and capital gains — earned by taxpayers whose modified adjusted gross income tops $200,000 ($250,000 for joint filers, $125,000 for separate filers). The NIIT thresholds aren’t annually adjusted.

Fortunately, many estate planning strategies are available that can help reduce income taxes. Consider the family limited partnership (FLP). A properly structured and operated FLP allows parents to shift income to children or other family members in lower tax brackets by giving them limited partnership interests. But watch out for the kiddie tax, which can undo the benefits of income shifting if you transfer FLP interests to dependent children under the age of 19 (age 24 for certain full-time students).

Tax basis planning

The heightened importance of income taxes also means that there may be an advantage to holding assets until death rather than giving them away during your life. If you give away an appreciated asset, the recipient takes over your tax basis in the asset, triggering capital gains taxes should he or she turn around and sell it.

When an appreciated asset is inherited, on the other hand, the recipient’s basis is “stepped up” to the asset’s fair market value on the date of death, erasing the built-in capital gain. So, from an income tax perspective, there’s an advantage to retaining appreciating assets until death rather than giving them away during your lifetime.

For those with large taxable estates, however, this advantage may be outweighed by estate tax concerns. From an estate tax perspective, it’s preferable to remove appreciating assets from your estate — through outright gifts or contributions to irrevocable trusts — as early as possible. That way, all future appreciation in their value will be shielded from estate tax.

If your net worth is safely within the estate tax exemption, retaining assets until death will minimize the impact of built-in capital gains on your heirs. Alternatively, if you want to share your wealth with your children or other family members, consider using an estate defective trust, which provides current income to your beneficiaries without removing the trust assets from your estate. (See “Have your cake and eat it” on page 2.)

Charitable planning

Higher income taxes can also have a big effect on charitable giving strategies. If your estate plan includes charitable bequests, for example, it makes sense to fund those bequests with assets that otherwise would generate “income in respect of a decedent” (IRD).

IRD is income that a deceased person earned but never received, such as IRA or qualified retirement plan distributions. Unlike other inherited assets, which are income-tax-free to the recipient, IRD assets can trigger a significant tax bill. But you can avoid these taxes by donating the assets to charity.

If your estate is within the exemption, it’s preferable to make charitable gifts during your lifetime. This is because, if you have no estate tax liability, charitable bequests won’t yield any tax benefits. But lifetime donations can generate valuable income tax deductions.

Do the math

Identifying the right estate planning strategies for you and your family is in part a matter of running the numbers. Projecting your income and estate tax liabilities — including state as well as federal taxes — will help you determine whether it’s better to focus on reducing estate taxes or income taxes. ■

International estate planning 101

Many traditional estate planning strategies are based on the assumption that everyone involved is a U.S. citizen. But if you or your spouse is a noncitizen, special rules apply that require additional planning.

Generally, U.S. citizens are subject to federal gift and estate taxes on all of their assets, wherever located. But they're also entitled to various exemptions, exclusions and deductions. These include the gift and estate tax exemption (currently $5.34 million), the annual gift tax exclusion (currently $14,000 per year per recipient), and the unlimited marital deduction, which permits one spouse to transfer tax-free any amount of property to the other spouse during life or at death.

Let's take a look at how things change when one or more noncitizens are involved.

General rules

If you're a U.S. resident, but not a citizen, you're treated similarly to a U.S. citizen by the IRS. You're subject to federal gift and estate taxes on your worldwide assets, but you also enjoy the benefits of the $5.34 million exemption and the $14,000 annual exclusion. And you can double the annual exclusion to $28,000 through gift-splitting with your spouse, so long as your spouse is a U.S. citizen or resident. Special rules apply to the marital deduction, however, as discussed on page 5.

Residency is a complicated subject. IRS regulations define a U.S. resident for federal estate tax purposes as someone who had his or her domicile in the United States at the time of death. One acquires a domicile in a place by living there, even briefly, with a present intention of making that place a permanent home. Whether you have your domicile in the United States depends on an analysis of several factors, including the relative time you spend in the United States and abroad, the locations and relative values of your residences and business interests, visa status, community ties, and the location of family members.

Tax traps for nonresident aliens

If you're a nonresident alien — that is, if you're neither a U.S. citizen nor a U.S. resident — there's good news and bad news in regard to estate tax law. The good news is that you're subject to U.S. gift and estate taxes only on property that's "situated" in the United States. Also, you can take advantage of the $14,000 annual exclusion (although you can't split gifts with your spouse).

The bad news is that your estate tax exemption drops from $5.34 million to a miniscule $60,000, so substantial U.S. property holdings can result in a big estate tax bill. Taxable property includes U.S. real estate as well as tangible personal property — such as cars, boats and artwork — located in the United States.

Determining the location of intangible property — such as stocks, bonds, partnership interests or other equity or debt interests — is more complicated. For example, if a nonresident alien makes a gift of stock in a U.S. corporation, the gift is exempt from U.S. gift tax. But a bequest of that same stock at death is subject to estate tax. On the other hand, a gift of cash on deposit in a U.S. bank is subject to gift tax, while a bequest of the same cash would be exempt from estate tax.

If you're a nonresident alien — that is, if you're neither a U.S. citizen nor a U.S. resident — there's good news and bad news in regard to estate tax law.

Your estate planning advisor can help you determine which property is situated in the United States and explore strategies for minimizing your tax exposure. For example, it may be possible to avoid U.S. estate taxes by setting up a foreign corporation to hold U.S. property.

No marital deduction for noncitizens

The unlimited marital deduction isn't available for gifts or bequests to noncitizens. However, there are three options for making tax-free transfers to a noncitizen spouse:

1. Use the transferor's $5.34 million exemption (provided the transferor is a U.S. citizen or resident).
2. Make annual exclusion gifts (currently, the limit for gifts to a noncitizen spouse is $145,000).
3. Bequeath assets to a qualified domestic trust, which contains provisions designed to ensure that the assets are ultimately taxed as part of the recipient's estate.

Know that the marital deduction is available for transfers from a noncitizen spouse to a citizen spouse.

Understand your international rights

If you, your spouse or both are noncitizens, traditional estate planning tools and strategies may not protect you against unnecessary gift and estate taxes. Your advisors can help you understand your options and identify strategies for minimizing your tax liability. ■

When is the optimal time to begin receiving Social Security?

Your estate plan is (or should be) closely connected to your wealth and retirement plans. Why? Your wealth plan can influence the amount of funds available during your retirement, and your retirement plan will affect how much of your estate will be left to pass on to your family after death. A factor to consider among all of this planning is when to begin receiving Social Security benefits.

Understand the impact

You can begin receiving Social Security benefits as early as age 62 or as late as age 70. The longer you wait, the higher the monthly benefit. This is because the system is designed to provide you with roughly the same total benefit (based on government life expectancy tables) regardless of when you begin receiving payments.

If you start benefits before your “normal” retirement age, you’ll receive a smaller check over a greater number of years. If you start later, you’ll receive a larger check over a smaller number of years.

Determine the breakeven point

A useful tool for choosing the right starting age is to calculate your breakeven point. For example, Scott, who is retired, is about to turn 62. He’s trying to decide between taking a reduced Social Security benefit right away or waiting until his normal retirement age of 66. Let’s say Scott’s full monthly benefit at 66 would be $2,000 and his reduced benefit at 62 would be $1,500.

You can begin receiving Social Security benefits as early as age 62 or as late as age 70 — the longer you wait, the higher the monthly benefit.

Ignoring cost of living adjustments for simplicity, Scott’s breakeven point is just before his 78th birthday. At that point, his total benefits will be about the same whether he starts at age 62 (192 months \times $1,500 = $288,000) or at age 66 (144 months \times $2,000 = $288,000). If Scott lives to at least age 78, waiting until age 66 to start collecting will provide him with greater lifetime benefits. If he doesn’t reach that age, he’s better off starting at age 62.

Let’s suppose that Scott’s father and grandfather both lived to be 90. If Scott follows suit, he’ll receive $72,000 of additional Social Security benefits by waiting until his normal retirement age of 66.

After determining your breakeven point, the right choice for you depends on several factors, including your actuarial life expectancy, your health and your family history. Also, keep in mind that the above example doesn't consider potential earnings on Social Security benefits. If you plan to invest your benefits, you may need to adjust your breakeven point upward or downward, depending on your expected rate of return.

Ask questions

There are many variables to considering the question of when to begin receiving Social Security benefits. Your wealth, retirement and estate plans will affect the answer. Your estate planning advisor can be a valuable resource in this process. ■

Estate Planning Pitfall

You don't have a buy-sell agreement for your business

If you own an interest in a closely held business, it's critical to have a well-designed, properly funded buy-sell agreement. Without one, an owner's death can have a negative effect on the surviving owners.

If one of your co-owners dies, for example, you may be forced to go into business with his or her family or other heirs. And if you die, your family's financial security may depend on your co-owners' ability to continue operating the business successfully.

There's also the question of estate taxes. With the federal gift and estate tax exemption currently at $5.34 million, estate taxes affect fewer people than they once did. But estate taxes can bring about a forced sale of the business if your estate is large enough and your family lacks liquid assets to satisfy the tax liability.

A buy-sell agreement requires (or permits) the company or the remaining owners to buy the interest of an owner who dies, becomes disabled, retires or otherwise leaves the business. It also establishes a valuation mechanism for setting the price and payment terms. In the case of death, the buyout typically is funded by life insurance, which provides a source of liquid funds to purchase the deceased owner's shares and cover any estate taxes or other expenses.

There are two basic types of a buy-sell agreement: a redemption agreement, under which the business buys back a departing owner's interest, and a cross-purchase agreement, under which the remaining owners buy the interest.

Depending on the structure of your business and other factors, the type of agreement you choose may have significant income tax implications. Your advisor can help you design a buy-sell agreement that's right for your business.

PRESERVING YOUR LEGACY...

LET MCQUEEN & SIDDALL, LLP GUIDE & COUNSEL YOU!

You Have Only One Chance to Get It Right...

Your personal estate or family business, whether large or small, is something you've worked hard to build. Why not seek out a trusted legal advisor to preserve Your Legacy.

When Choices Matter, You Must Choose Wisely...

You can retain attorneys with advanced legal degrees in Estate Planning. They have the skills and education of big law firm attorneys...but when planning and preserving your Legacy, our Partners personally guide and serve You.

Your Best Choice... Our attorneys are accessible and responsive, exploit technology to deliver quality legal work efficiently, render practical and effective solutions, communicate clearly, and protect You with integrity.

McQueen & Siddall, LLP is a successful and highly regarded Personal and Business Legacy boutique law firm. The reasons you benefit are just this simple.

Our partners know what they are doing. Our partners love what they are doing. And our partners believe in what they are doing. Our partners do things differently. For your benefit, our partners work smarter, make the complex simple, and initiate the uncomfortable but necessary conversations. Our partners' entrepreneurial spirits drive them to exceed your expectations. Fascinated by innovation our partners strive to redefine the way they practice law everyday.

Our partners welcome the opportunity to serve as your personal legal counselor as you commence on this important journey of your lifetime.

WHAT MAKES US UNIQUE? OUR NON-NEGOTIABLES! COMMITMENTS TO YOU UNLIKE ANY OTHER LAW FIRM...

- Focused Practice – We focus on fewer areas of the law, so you receive the highest level of sophistication for a reasonable fee.
- Intentional Listening – You will talk...we will listen, so we can understand your issues...and then provide an affordable and easy-to-implement solution.
- Effective Communication – You will understand your solutions, know your schedule, and be kept informed – no need to guess what is going on....
- Location of Your Choice – You always can't meet at our law offices during weekday business hours. We can come to you – your office, home or other location...even on weekends or evenings.
- Fixed Fees –Because of our intentional listening, you can receive a "fixed fee" proposal for your legal services. Relax... you will experience "peace of mind" from the first day of our engagement.
- Unmatched Integrity –Our integrity is priceless to us. You benefit by knowing we will do the right thing for you...even if doing the right thing cost money out of our own pockets.
- Simple Sophistication –You desire a "cutting edge" solution for your estate plans. Having invested our money and time in obtaining advanced law degrees in Estate Planning, you will receive the same highly sophisticated legal planning offered at large law firms, but with a personal touch!
- Current Innovations – Technology changes rapidly. Our boutique law firm invests in the latest and best technology to better serve you. Technology leverages our resources, including staff, between our two offices.

We welcome the opportunity to serve as your Guide, Counselor and Advocate as you commence on this important journey of your lifetime!

(PHOTO OF David Siddall and Bill McQueen)

This material is intended for educational purposes only and is not legal advice. You should consult with an attorney for advice concerning your particular situation.

While the material in This Guide is based on information believed to be reliable, no warranty is given as to its accuracy or completeness.

Concepts are current as of the publication date and are subject to change without notice.

IRS Circular 230 Notice: We are required to advise you no person or entity may use any tax advice in this communication or any attachment to (i) avoid any penalty under federal tax law or (ii) promote, market or recommend any purchase, investment or other action.